1. The rule Which SIGCHI or CHI rule did you meet? Quote it or describe it (for example a travel-award criterion, the fee-waiver map, a reviewer qualification bar or reviewing duty, the accommodation request at registration, site selection, an in-person-only requirement, or another).

2. What it required What did the rule ask you to prove, disclose or pay to be counted?

--

3. What it did not see What about you or your situation did the rule not see, or get wrong?

--

4. What happened Tick one and say briefly what it took. ☐ It saw me: it worked as written. ☐ It contorted me: I met it, at a cost. ☐ It left me out: I could not meet it.

--

5. What it cost A word or a figure in each column is enough; leave blank if none.

Money	Time	Paperwork	Energy	Risk
fees, fares, what you paid up front or lost	hours, days, deadlines missed	forms, letters, evidence, who you had to ask	explaining yourself, chasing, worry	exposure, being on a list, what could go wrong

Consent Tick what applies. Cases are read by the organisers and shared among accepted participants only; nothing is published without your consent. Composite personas are built only from real statements and checked with you before use. You can withdraw your case up to two weeks before CHI.

☐ Anonymise my case before sharing it with participants ☐ My statements may be used, anonymised, in a composite persona ☐ I may attend in Pittsburgh ☐ I would join the online session in March instead
